WAV files and short animations to enhance classroom instruction or expand student learning. Additional tools include an App library, specialized learning materials for each device, and a cloud learning environment that enables students to move between devices, and to study anywhere, any time. Edison version 5 was designed to be easy to use, easy to navigate and easy to teach. The learning environment is also easy to adapt to the needs of students and teachers. The most prominent features of Edison are its emphasis on self-directed learning, flexible learning activities, teaching through collaboration, new access to educational resources, and free access to a large collection of EDISON resources. The advantage of this environment is that students can decide what, when and where to do their learning. Teachers can use different resources to supplement their lesson plans. Students can work on their own at their own pace, and teachers have a comprehensive dashboard to monitor and assess student learning. Edison encourages collaboration between the teacher, the students and the Edison team. Teachers can mark up their content as they do their lessons. Students can comment on their teacher's content. Teachers can send real-time messages to all or individual students. Teachers can communicate with each other using a private chat room. Teachers can track the progress of individual students using a single profile. Teachers can receive a weekly email with important updates. Teachers can contact the team for support. Teachers The real advantage of using the Edison learning environment is that teachers can use it as a tool to meet the changing needs of students and themselves. Teachers can use Edison to do their own learning. They can learn how to do their own lessons, and evaluate them in terms of the skills they need to teach. Teachers can use the powerful real-time feedback to help them know where they need to improve. Teachers can use different resources to supplement their lesson plans. Teachers can mark up their content as they do their lessons. Students can comment on their teacher's content. Teachers can send real-time messages to all or individual students. Teachers can communicate with each other using a private chat room. Teachers can track the progress of individual students using a single profile. Teachers can contact the team for support. One advantage of having teachers develop content in this environment is that they can test and improve their lesson plans before they are taught to the students. They can test them to see what resources they need. They can also add activities that use the resources they already have. This can save them time and money. Te 82157476af
